6° SENSO
ART GALLERY
A different sense of Art

On the occasion of the special event “Raw for Peace,” Sesto Senso Art Gallery is exhibiting (Woman in the Shadows), a work by Antonio Tamburro that explores the fine line between the inner self and the outside world. The work, dominated by shades of blue and gray, depicts an enigmatic gaze that emerges from the darkness, creating an immediate and captivating visual tension. It is interesting to note the interplay of gazes: the viewer turns toward the painting, and the woman depicted seems, in turn, to be observing the viewer. The window, a universal symbol of passage and communication, is transformed here into an emotional threshold, a refuge from the outside world. The artist creates a suspended, almost dreamlike space in which time slows down. Peace is not always a crystal-clear silence or an open horizon.
Sometimes it hides behind a half-open window, as in this painting: a young woman observes the world from behind blue shutters, revealing only a glimpse of her eyes. She does not reveal herself entirely; she does not expose herself. Yet, precisely in that gesture, she seems to guard something precious. Her gaze is watchful, but not agitated. It is as if she has chosen to stand aside to protect her inner peace. Outside is the sky, vast and uneven, full of movement and uncertainty; inside, however, there is a cozy intimate space where the noise of the world arrives muffled. Those shutters are not a prison, but a filter. The girl is not fleeing: she observes, reflects, takes her time. That moment of pause is when true peace is built—a peace rooted in listening and self-care.
